The United Nations has greatly honored Mahatma Gandhi. Gandhi's non-cooperation movement, kicked off in the early 1920s, called for Indians to boycott British goods and traditions and become self-reliant. Ironically, the ultimate proponent of non-violence was killed by assassination while walking to his evening prayer meeting. His father was truthful and fair-minded and Gandhi surely did inherit these qualities. When he was arrested several more times over the years for his actions during the movement, Gandhi calmly fasted in prison, believing that his death would embarrass the British enough to spur independence, which had become the focus of his politics by 1931. After the first World War, the Muslims feared for the safety of their Caliph or religious leader and a worldwide protest was being organised to fight against the collapsing status of the Caliph. Furthermore, Gandhi influenced Nelson Mandela for his freedom struggle. On December 7, 1931, the Communist Prime Minister resigned. He had a ticket which booked him a 1st class place on a train, but when a British man spots him, the man starts to insist that he sits in the third class, that this is not a place for an Indian man. This unfair and offensive act sparked off the thought and the wish of rebellion against this violence and untruth. Consequently, many became upset at this decision. Most noteworthy, he said that each person should consume according to his needs. Gandhi certainly put forward this question. He even experienced discrimination personally. Born in India, Gandhi spent a large part of his life in South Africa.
